COMMUNICATED. FAREWELL YE GENTLE FLOWERS! BY LARRY LEE.

Farewell, ye gentle flowers, Your sunny smiles have flown, Your fragrant vines no longer deck The valleys of our home:

Your scented breathings follow not, In forest, nook, or dell, Ye sleep within your silent graves, Sweet flowers, fare ye well.

The deep blue bosomed violet, Died in the early spring.

When the Red-Breast and the Gold-Finch. Their happiest anthems sing: The Hyacinth and Mary-Gold, They each have had their day,

The Tea-Rose and Forget-me-Not, They too have past away. The vellow vested Autumn, With vagrant winds is here, Which fill the wood lands, once so fresh,

And make them sad and sear: Her chilly rains have chased away, And withered every hope, Which bound ye to your happy homes, On mountain, hill, and slope.

When will ye come bright flowers, Our blushing cheeks to wave, When will ye come with dewy leaves, To deck the lonely grave:

When will ye come, with breathings soft, To fan the boundless main. To wreath the brow of crested hills, When will ve come again?

The sunny days of spring time, With clouds of richest dye, Will greet ye with their scented gales, And bright cerulean sky: Clad in your robes of glist'ning hue,

Ye'll come to hold your sway,

Sweet flowers, yet when ere ye come,

Ye'll find some past away! Clarke County, Va., October, 1858. PROFICIENCY IN NECK-TIES. Those who are well pass their half century, can remember the time when the neckcloth sent to purchasers immediately after the drawing. was the great subject of solicitude to those who desired to stand high among men; when the aristocracy of dre-s generally spoiled a dezen in making a dinner-tie, and another dozen after dinner in making the opera-tie; when the starch manufacture vied with the corn laws and the distilleries put together in its effect upon the food of the poor in this day of Heaven bless the Regent and the Duke of York. There appeared a book on the art of tying the neck-cloth, which discoursed in this wise touching the matter in hand: Observe, said the eulogist, the man who comes into the room with a well-tied neck cloth. The company rises to receive him; the occupant of the best chair near the fire abandons it for his use; sision, or comb tted, if at all, with respect rising almost into reverence. The contrast shown in the treatment of a bad tie was so distressing a picture that we banished it from our memory. We took no pride out of it, for our own performance was faulty, and we knew it .- Athenœum
